

JOINT NEWS RELEASE

21 August 2019

Peddler of duty-unpaid cigarettes and chewing tobacco prosecuted and sentenced to 19 months and 11 weeks' jail

The Health Sciences Authority (HSA) and Singapore Customs have jointly prosecuted Veerappan Vimalraj, 33, an Indian national for storing and dealing with a total of 14,130 packets of duty-unpaid cigarettes, and for possessing for sale a total of 12,180 sachets of khaini tobacco, a type of chewing tobacco that is prohibited in Singapore. The street value of the chewing tobacco is estimated to be more than $24,000, while the duty, and Goods and Services Tax (GST) evaded on the cigarettes amounted to about $120,670 and $8,900 respectively.

On 21 May 2019, Singapore Customs officers conducted an operation and sighted Veerappan entering a storage facility in Neythal Road. A total of 10,680 sachets of prohibited chewing tobacco and 13,130 packets of duty-unpaid cigarettes were found in the storage facility.

Investigations revealed that Veerappan was paid $600 per month to sell chewing tobacco and duty-unpaid cigarettes. Besides the sachets that were found in the storage facility, another 1,500 sachets of the chewing tobacco and 1,000 packets of duty-unpaid cigarettes were found in a car parked near the storage facility. Veerappan would use the car to deliver the chewing tobacco and cigarettes to his customers. In order to avoid attention, he would hide the chewing tobacco and cigarettes in bushes after reaching the delivery locations. After collecting the chewing tobacco and cigarettes, his customers would either place the payment at the same spot or hand over the cash to him. The car and cash of $5,927 from sales proceeds of duty-unpaid cigarettes were also seized.

On 21 August 2019, Veerappan was found guilty and convicted on a total of three counts for offences under the the Tobacco (Control of Advertisements and Sale) Act and the Customs Act. He was sentenced by the State Courts to 19 months and 11 weeks' imprisonment and the seized cash was forfeited.
